The concept of remote visualization (RV) is to perform computation and initial display generation on a remote system. The images are then streamed and displayed on a local system. An interactive back-channel is provided. Thus the user is able to visualize and interact locally in real-time with the data on the remote system using its memory, disk space, CPU and GPU power.